Auburn is nationally recognized for its commitment to academic excellence, community outreach, positive work environment, student engagement, and thriving community.

Minimum Qualifications

Minimum qualifications include a Ph.D. from an accredited institution in the conservation social sciences at the time employment begins, along with documented experience in research and teaching. The successful candidate is expected to develop a nationally recognized and externally funded research program in the conservation social sciences.

The candidate must have experience conducting research in the conservation social sciences. Focal areas may include but are not limited to:

- Human dimensions of wildlife/natural resources
- Coastal policy and governance
- Coupled human-natural systems
- Social components of climate change science
- Social aspects of conservation planning

Other qualifications include a record of successful publishing and experience developing proposals and grant management. To be considered for the Associate Professor level, candidates must provide examples of unique and significant contributions to research and teaching, and evidence of national or international reputation in their field.

Desired Qualifications

We are especially interested in candidates who can work across disciplinary boundaries and contribute to the overall CFWE program and our Natural Resource Management (undergraduate and graduate)
