Environmental Policy is a core course in the Environmental Studies Program, introducing students to the complexities of environmental policy through a case-based approach. The course introduces concepts and techniques central to environmental policy, focusing initially on the United States, then linking to global environmental policy-making. Case studies offer insights at local, state, national and international levels into systems thinking, transboundary issues, and stakeholder perspectives in Environmental Policy. A syllabus is available upon request but we encourage applicants to tailor the course around their own strengths in the field.

Qualifications

- Advanced degree in relevant field
- Teaching experience at the college level
